Alleged to Have Hit George Satauk With a Stone at Crystal Works.

JURY IS QUICKLY SECURED

Only 23 Names Called When Panel Is Complete—Activity in Divorce Cases and Record is Made—Alienation Suit Filed—Other Court News.

Special to The Courier.
UNIONTOWN, March 20.—Robert Martin was placed on trial this morning for the murder of George Satauk, a heating boss at Crystal works, near Glass station. Martin is alleged to have hit Satauk with a stone on October 22, and on October 31 the victim died. District Attorney Henderson is asking Martin's conviction for second degree murder.

Young Martin attended a celebration at House 15 on October 22 and drank freely of the beer that was there. He went out and soon a stone came crashing through the window. It struck a boarder on the nose. Satauk stepped out to telephone for a physician and three foreigners in his home saw Martin hit him with a stone. Martin recurred to West Virginia and was out about two months ago.

Only 22 names were called before the jury was completed. It took but an hour to fill the panel. District Attorney is prosecuting Martin with Attorney W. C. McGonigle with the defense.

A new record for divorce cases was set this morning when a decree was handed down granting a divorce to Mrs. Rosemary M. Field against Attorney James H. Flotz. The cause filed on February 21, incompatibility of temper, and it is to have been the third time that parts of the papers were left on the flies. Surety was observed in regard to the suit.

Anna Heron was granted a divorce from William Heron. They were married in 1891. Cruel treatment was alleged.

Attorney John Dugan, Jr., filed a libel in divorce today for Louis Kirby of South Connellsville against Julia Obshay, his wife. Infidelity is alleged. The couple were married in 1898.

A libel in divorce, also alleging infidelity, was filed for Josephine Granger against Jimmie Granger, the parties living in Uniontown.

A rule was issued in Mrs. Etta Stafford to show cause why the order requiring William Stafford to pay a stipulated sum should not be rescinded and the payment of $100 in arrears be stopped. A divorce suit is pending between the couple.

Hugo Wantz, a Brownsville bartender, has entered suit against Mike Ferens to recover $2,000 for the loss of his business. The plaintiff says he and his wife lived happily together 13 years, until they moved to Uniontown and Ferens, it is alleged, attempted to seduce the wife. Mrs. Wantz has pending a suit for divorce from Hugo and he blames Ferens for it.

Venel Stiglitz has entered suit against Andy Franko and Paul Washington to recover $210 alleged to be due for a farm sold the defendants. The farm is located in Austria.

Charles Berry was placed on trial this morning for a statutory offense against his step-daughter, Lucy McManaway, and Theodore J. Anderson of Bethany, presented a jury on information received and the wife and step-daughter and witnesses against the man. Berry was convicted.

The jury in the case of Fred Sappier, charged with a criminal assault upon Ethel Holzke, disagreed. The case may be retried this week.

Presents Petition to Oust Councilmen

A petition of taxpayers, presented to Judge J. Q. Van Sweringen in the large court room at Uniontown Saturday afternoon, asked for the removal of the present eight Uniontown Council. After consideration the court granted a rule on the petition requiring them to show cause why their seats should not be declared vacant.

Those named in the rule are: Councilmen C. H. Wilkey, W. D. Gholson, Hugh V. Gholson, George Gholson, Stephen Field, Alex Chisholm, Claude Miller and A. E. McCabe comprising the entire membership of the present Council. If the seats are declared vacant, it will then be the duty of the court to appoint Councilmen to fill the vacancies until the next councilmen election.

McGill enlisted in Company 11, 112nd Missouri Volunteer Infantry, under the late Capt. L. M. DuShane on August 19, 1862. He was wounded at Fredericksburg, December 13, 1862, and again at Gettysburg on July 1, 1863. He was transferred to the Veteran Reserve Corps April 27, 1865, and was honorably discharged June 26, 1865.

With an Arizona ranger named Palmer and two cowboys named Glenn, Bill gave a series of roping contests and wild west shows in the Agua Prieta bull ring that never were surpassed on the border.

Bill, the bull ring, the horse and the rangeland, Buffalo Bill's and other wild west shows, were the east as children, they compared with the performances given in that Agua Prieta bull ring. The prizes were in usual and rare high as $200 each for the winners. The contests were for the last time in roping and tying a steer, wild steer riding, roping, saddle and riding unbroken colts, and goat roping. And let it be known that the bunch of steers, horses and goats in that corral were really wild. They had been rounded up from the ranges in Sonora and the San Pedro and Sulphur Springs valleys. The steers had never had a rope around their neck or legs over their noses. They were shot out of a little runaway leading from the corral which had to be barred on top as well as along the sides to keep them from climbing out.

Before the alkali dust had fairly settled on Bill's clothes he met up with the ranger Palmer at Benson, a little town on the Southern Pacific about 70 miles north of Douglas. The rangers had just been disbanded by act of the Legislature, and Palmer conceived the idea of giving a series of roping contests and real wild west performances in the old Agua Prieta bull ring. Bill fell for it and renovated the bull ring. Bill fell for it and thick plank fence around it far beyond the old adobe wall and the dilapidated grand stand and boxes.

Trucks in the snow led to mud upon the mud, giving rise to the theory that the fire was of incendiary origin.

NEVER ANY INDIGESTION, DYSPEPSIA,
OR SICK, GASSY, UPSET STOMACH.A Little Diapospin Will Make You Feel Fine in Five Minutes.

Take your hour, out-of-order stomach—or maybe you call it Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Gastritis or Catarrhal Stomach. It does not take long to recover him, which he had been to recover his horse which he had hired to a man about a month ago.

An Italian laborer employed on a coal train here met with an accident Friday by which he broke his leg.

Lewis Dillingham of Mt. Marion, was in the journal office. He is recovering from an operation which he had been to recover his horse which he had hired to a man about a month ago.

The correct name for your trouble is Food Fermentation—Food souring;

The Digestive organs become weak, there is lack of gastric juice; your food is only half digested, and you become affected with loss of appetite, pressure and fullness after eating, vomiting, nausea, heartburn, griping in bowels, tenderness in the pit of stomach, bad taste in mouth, constipation, pain in limbs, sleeplessness, belching of gas, biliousness, sick headache, nervousness, dizziness or many other similar symptoms.

If your appetite is failing and nothing tempts you, or you belch gas, or if you feel bloated after eating, or your food has like a lump of lead on your stomach, you can make up your mind now, that there is but one cause—fermentation of unfermented food.

Prove to yourself in five minutes that your stomach is as good as any; that there is nothing really wrong.

Stop this fermentation and begin eating what you want without fear of discomfort or misery.

Almost instant relief is waiting for you. It is merely a matter of how soon you take a little Diapospin.

WASHINGTON, Mar. 20.—Henry Lane Wilson, Ambassador to Mexico, who is now in this city, is believed to be the victim of an extremely serious shooting by United States soldiers on the Mexican border.

The report of the gravity of the political situation in the republic across the Rio Grande is so late, caused the sudden decision to leave Washington, and a large number within only a short distance of the turbulent border states of Mexico. Mr. Wilson has served as Minister to Belgium and as minister to Germany, and after a tour in Indiana and Washington State before he entered the diplomatic service.

MONDAY EVENING, MAR. 20, 1911.

COURAGEOUS AND COURAGEOUS NEWSPAPERS.

It is refreshing, in these degenerate days of editorial sub servility, when those newspapers that are not owned by special interests are afraid of offending any possible source of revenue, to find one which speaks the words of truth in ringing tones like reverberates from hill to valley throughout the great community like Westmoreland county. Concerning the ill-advised and ill-favored miners' strike certain coal regions of that country, and some of its attendant circumstances, the Greensburg Tribune says:

"It seems almost incomprehensible that troops of foreign brigands should be given the right to blockade the wells which are in existence and promote outlawry and murder."

The threatening letter, written by one of these bandits, was received by the manager of the Westmoreland Coal Company, tells its own horrid story. The letter was translated by an expert of the United Mine Workers of America and the envelope in which the letter was mailed was reproduced on the first page of this issue of The Tribune.

To employ the sent of the organized miners for such treacherous purposes is a violation to organized labor generally. Such methods shatter public confidence and promote public contempt.

It is to this breed of bloodthirsty criminals that Francis Fagan, formerly president of the Miners' Protective Association, would have the coal producers of Westmoreland county district practically turn over their children, friends and relatives.

The coal properties in the Westmoreland county field are immensely valuable. They remain in the hands of a small number of the militant officers of the miners, now disorganized and broken in commanding bands of cut-throats and robbers who, in their frantic days, take possession of the several coal properties and would put in their dangerous hands the great coal and oil organization in the United States.

Organized labor in Pennsylvania, most of necessity, stand ashore at the bar of justice. The miners' cause has been dragged by those relentless outlaws who now represent them in the Westmoreland county field. Law and order are dead, law and order, the trees and homes of the people of the country are jeopardized.

They are cutthroat, and savage, these men, and stand with the organization of America. They shall protect this country from the banditry of the coal fields, and will not kill, burn and rob. If the conservative element has lost control of the organization then the law of the land must be applied to the men of the law, and the lives and homes of the people of the country are jeopardized.

If the United Mine Workers would save the good name of their organization from the disgrace of being associated with lawlessness, they will do well to be prompt in denouncing this attempt to fix upon them the odious name of assassins.

The strike in the Westmoreland mining regions was lost as much through the lawlessness of the strikers, or their sympathizers, as through the injustice of their causes. They struck not because of any grievance, but because of the desire to defeat the miners' plan to join the United Mine Workers and contribute still further the Democratic majority in Greene county.

WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENCE.

United Press Special.
 WASHINGTON, D. C., March 20, 1911.

Sensational stories elicited in this country about the origin of human hair imported from China have reached Congress. George E. Anderson, at Honolulu, has sent a report on the subject which was made public.

According to Anderson, shipments of human hair from Kowloon to the United States increased in value from $11,200 in 1907 to $205,137 gold in 1910. The exports to all countries in 1910 were "Much of the hair that formerly went out "raw" is now finished," he reported, and is sent to Paris, whence it is shipped to the United States as French hair.

"The origin of the hair shipped from Hongkong to the United States is not known, but it is believed that the hair was taken from the dead, and is not consistent with Chinese views of the dead and with Chinese thought. The hair shipped abroad from this Empire is largely from the dead, and is mostly women. A Chinese maid in dressing her mistress had simply saves and sells hair, but the combings and clippings of the hair she saves here can obtain considerable value from plying their trade. The vast mass of the hair shipped abroad and imported into the United States consists of little wigs or twistings. Below if ever are full heads of hair to be taken, nor are queues used. In one of the largest houses of the trade there are though thousands of queues have been sent in Hongkong in the past several months, 1910 is the report, the hair has not been sold.

"A local hair establishment operated by an American export is working hard to sell the hair to the United States export trade. The hair is first combed into lengths. It is then washed in soaps, soft soap, and ammonia, is dried, and then combed again, and treated with water. It is again dried, and then treated to four or five chemicals, according to the hair, and then sterilized and ready to fit for use. It is then bleached, washed again, and prepared in different colors and packed.

The Greenback Tribune claims to have made a white it probably used a tack.

If there is going to be half as much war in the Connellsville area as in Germany, there's nothing to be done except to go to hell that General Sherman is going to do.

There's sometimes a difference between promise and performance which has to be determined in court, but when the performance is criminal it is not safe thing to plead in defense.

The Unofficial Organ has developed into a regular screamer. The WMC isn't so bad with those daily scare heads, they could be quietened.

The Democratic House at Washington will proceed to revise and reduce the tariff, and gradually to increase the amount to be levied on imports, and the Conservative element has lost control of the organization than the law of the land is to be applied to the men of the law, and the lives and homes of the people of the country are jeopardized.

They are courageous and courageous, but they are not so bad with those daily scare heads, they could be quietened.

THAT TOWN WILL BE NAMED

Special to The Courier.

SCOTTDALE, March 20.—There was a quick response to the action of the Chamber of Commerce in regard to the Sproul State road bill, in which Scottdale and Everson made objection to being left out by the committee in charge of the bill. This was done by a letter from the office of Commissioner of Highways Joseph W. Hunter on Saturday. The letter was received by President R. H. Parker and Secretary W. L. Kelly and after acknowledging the receipt of the action of the Scottdale Chamber of Commerce, the writer and the Scottdale and Everson Methodists raised money yesterday morning to secure the name of their town on the proposed highway.

The Adult Men's Bible class of the Mt. Nebo United Brethren Sunday school held a banquet at their church on Saturday evening, which was well attended. Austin Taylor is the teacher of the class and Rev. J. P. Funk is the pastor of that church.

Electric Bulb Trust Makes Cut Of One-Third in Price of Globes.

The electrical trust is in a quandary, which recently was attacked by the United States government, and in its defense, in restraining of trade, is being dissolved, according to a report emanating from a New York source.

The dying net of the monopoly is said to have been a 33½ per cent reduction in the price of incandescent lamps, which is to be announced next week in a circular to the trade.

This is regarded as a move intended to propitiate the government or the people, or both, as it means a saving of $6,000,000 a year to the consumers of electric lighting supplies.

Lamps that heretofore have sold for 18 cents each hereafter are to retail at 12 cents.

The dissolution of the trust, in actuality, is in progress, as the announcement remains to be seen.

The Catbird Brings Real Spring

The first robin heralding the approach of spring was reported over a fortnight ago, as yet no word of the first blue bird or the first catbird has been chronicled. Even in summer time the blue bird is scarce in this part of Western Pennsylvania. The catbird, however, is common. And when the fuzzy, middle-aged and quarrelsome little fellow does come his arrival is a safe assurance of the real presence of spring.

The catbird is the Northern mocking bird, not handsome in his modest gray-brown dress, but with the soul of song throbbing in his breast. A dual nature has caused this little songster to be much maligned.

Frequently he is seen sitting peculiarly from branch to branch, stretching, coquettishly, apparently everywhere, in general in shrill and querulous tones, but in his contented and peaceful moments there throbs from his delicate throat the essence of divine melody.

Col. L. T. Brown Dead.

Lieutenant Colonel Lewis T. Brown, aged 66, aide-de-camp on the staff of former Governor Pennington, died at his home in Mount Pleasant, March 18. He was a nephew of the late General Alexander H. Coffroth and for a time was editor of the Somerset Democrat. A widow and two children survive.

Joe Cannon vs. Champ Clark on The Immediate Political Outlook.

From THE COLUMBIAN MAGAZINE

JOE CANNON.

Special interview given to Henry Main and published in the April number of the Columbian Magazine.

Says from the heights of the rotted gallery where he had never seen Joseph Murray Cannon, and it must be agreed that, from that point of view, the cartoonists have created a great nemesis, "Uncle Joe." At closer view, the former speaker gives a very different impression. Although of medium stature, he looks tall, and certainly does not look his seventy-four years. Few men of sixty have the clear, wholesome complexion of "Joe" Cannon, the sturdy, penetrating gaze, the expression at once deliberate and frank, impulsive. His features are the type you meet in Lincoln's "Log Cabin of United States History"—the old American type of the Revolution and 1812, of the men who made the Republic before the composite element now so frequent in our urban communities began to take the place of the old stock, and to reap the harvest planted by the Fathers and watered by the blood of their descendants. One is not surprised to learn that Mr. Cannon was born in North Carolina, being brought north when he was a baby. He is one of the big men whom the South has been permitted to give to the Nation in the way of our greatest national detriment within the last half century, has been the suppression of Southern genius, courage, and ability as applied in the broadest sense to national affairs. "Thus far, but no farther!" has been the unwritten veto upon the aspirations of that section of the Union which gave us Washington, Madison, Monroe, Jackson, the Marshalls—and Lincoln.

Mr. Cannon has a public school education, and studied law in the hours which some young men give to having "a good time." As State's Attorney he gained a reputation for straight-to-the-mark common-sense methods, which generally carried Justice his way, especially as Mr. Cannon also had a reputation for not pocketing except when he was sure that he was right. Many a time he gave a helping hand to those whose duty required him to bring to justice, and put them on the path of honor and success. Mr. Cannon became the best liked man in Danville, and the first of his successive elections to Congress was by a majority that attested his popularity. He has been a member of Congress thirty-eight years, and re-elected in 1910, and he was Speaker of the House for eight years, until March 10, 1911.

Speaker Carlisle appointed Mr. Cannon a member of the Committee on Rules, the other Republican members being Thomas B. Reed, and when the House became Republican in 1903, the three Republican members of the Committee on Rules were Reed, McFaulley, and Cannon. As Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, Mr. Cannon stood for general economy, vigilance, and prudence in protecting public funds, and wise liberality in expenditures, all that were likely to promote the general welfare and to serve the progress of useful science. Mr. Cannon saw that money was placed at the disposal of the late Professor Langley in demonstrating the practicability of mechanical flight for machines heavier than air. Mr. Cannon was one of the authors of the bill providing for the geological survey of the public domain, which enabled the government to enter upon the vast legislation and exploration schemes that have opened great areas of formerly waste land to settlement, and turned deserts into flourishing farms and orchards; altogether a work of conservation and development unparalleled in any age of the world. The creation of Potomac Park was made possible by Mr. Cannon's advocacy of the draining of the Potomac Flats. The other buildings of the Senate and House, the National Museum and the Municipal the United States is not to gain market enough in Canada to interfere with English trade, since few reductions are made on our products that would work a Canadian market, and these reductions are small. That is, British manufacturers are to continue to enjoy a preference in Canada, while Canada gradually supplies the American market in the markets of the United States.

"That the proposed agreement is hampered with much satisfaction in certain directions by the absence in view of the fact that while the farmer is left more to the free trade blast from the North, interests which have depended on the farmer and stock raiser for their supplies are carefully protected. For instance, foot animals on the hoof, which the farmer has to sell, come into this country free of duty, while on the mutton manufactured from these animals there is a duty of 1½ cents a pound."

"It is claimed, in support of the proposed agreement, that the price of wheat from an American farmer is controlled by and dependent on the supply of wheat and the market price of coal, and that, therefore, the free admission of Canadian wheat would not have any effect in depressing the price of the American grain. Almost on the day that this argument received wide and authoritative publicity, the following appeared in the midwest report of a leading New York newspaper which favors the proposed reciprocity plan: "Sentiment was bornish in the wheat market owing to the continued increase of both cash and export demand, the foreign situation, and the probability that the reciprocity treaty will be passed. Truly the hard-headed dealers in wheat believe that free wheat from Canada means a lower price for American wheat."

"Would not that mean cheaper bread, Mr. Cannon, and lower cost of living for the masses?"

The ex-Speaker smiled grimly. "Did you read what Senator McCumber of North Dakota, had to say on this point?" he replied. "I think he figured out that the average man would eat about 10 times as much wheat as the farmer had received for the wheat he gave him the bread. Every body knows that the farmer's price is a very remote, practically a negligible relation to the price you pay your baker."

"Do you think, Mr. Cannon, that the admission of Canadian beef cattle would give us cheaper beef?"

"Have you noticed any reduction in the price of sheep since hides were put on the free list?" rejoined the ex-Speaker.

"The Republican party," continued Mr. Cannon, "has always stood for the protection of American industries, including the growth of all industries, the other and support of all the others, the agricultural. I can see no reason for abandoning the American farmer to free competition with Canada for the American market. Not one plausible argument has been presented in favor of such a reversal of Republican policy, and the only consistent argument is that of my Democratic friend and successor, Mr. Champ Clark, that it is a broad step in the direction of free trade, which is the Democratic policy. Democrats who follow Mr. Clark in that direction are to their party principles."

"Might I ask, Mr. Cannon, what your attitude will be during the coming two years?"

"What it has always been—that of Republicans who believes that the principle of the Republican party are just an adequate to the safe guidance of the American people to day as they were 40 or 50 years ago. On that I do not care to speak at length, but the attitude of some of our brothers toward genuine, old-fashioned Republicanism suggests a change. The Conference of the General, and ministers, and laity alike were inspired by it. When Peter Cartwright had his sermon in that part of his life, Peter Cartwright buried himself in the fervor, the emotions, the apostolic fire that breathed in every utterance of the most effective sermon of the Conference, and ministers, and laity alike were inspired by it. When Peter had concluded, he was told that General Jackson wished to speak to him. With a hearty grasp of the hand the General spoke of the impression that the sermon had made on him, at the same time handing Peter ten dollars to help him in his ministry. And thus ended Basson's foolish attempt to belittle Peter Cartwright."

Mr. Cannon paused as if in thought.

"The people," he resumed, "can be trusted to see right and to do right, without assistance. The difference between true metal and counterfeit, between red blood and a yellow streak, lies not among the mountaineers, and whatever duty called him, regarding the homely garb of the frontier, his chief article of attire being a hunting shirt and a girdle. He could not bear the heart, and he reached the hearts of those to whom he spoke. Wherever Peter Cartwright went the people turned out to hear him, because they felt that they would get the Gospel message from one whose simple, forcible words they could readily grasp, and that came for a Conference at Nashville, and Peter Cartwright, with his hunting shirt, was among the attendant preachers. Hon. P. Basson, afterward bishop, presided, and was in personal appearance at least quite like Peter. Brother Basson was a white shirt, and was gotten up generally in the style of a clergyman accustomed to the environment of a growing community, already at that time the chief centre of Tennessee. Basson did not approve of the present conditions in bringing about what they will accomplish. It's up to them."

"Then you are not very hopeful as to the future?"

"I am hopeful as to the future," replied Mr. Cannon, with emphasis, "not only hopeful, but optimistic. Not only a Democratic majority in Congress, or even a Democratic in the White House, can hit for long the growth and progress of the American people. That growth may be halted, dawed for a time, by the pursuit of fecklessness and, while the wings into the sloughs and quagmires of free trade, but the remedy comes with the awakening and, to change the metaphor, the ship of state gets on a level keel and sails into the harbor of prosperity—under the same old Republican auspices."

"Brother Peter Cartwright will deliver a sermon in this church at six o'clock tomorrow morning, and all who wish to hear him are requested to be present."

The Roosevelt Dam, Arizona, and the Men Who Erected It.

PHOENIX, Ariz., Mar. 20.—This dam making possible the so-called "Salt River project," dedicated by President Roosevelt, is one of the wonderful engineering achievements of the age. Its height is 280 feet, and the top is 1,650 feet long, and at the bottom it is 170 feet wide. A twenty-six story building which covered an entire city block would not fit all the space occupied by this mass of masonry. The dam is located in a canyon in Arizona, 62 miles from the nearest railroad. The irrigation canals supplied by the water from this dam will cover 100,000 acres of fine land, and by pumping with electric power an additional 60,000 acres will be irrigated. The dam cost the government $3,000,000, and about 600 Apache Indians were employed for several years as laborers. The government holds a mortgage on all the land which will be watered, and in ten years the purchasers of the land will repay the government. The Salt River valley is semi-tropical in climate. Its products are singularly like those of Egypt. Here the orange, lemon, lime, palm, fig and date trees flourish; also almond, peach, cherries and other fruits in abundance. Alfalfa, corn, cotton, barley and wheat yield enormous crops. The men who directed the erection of the dam are P. H. Newell, chief of the reclamation service, Arthur Powell Davis, chief engineer, and Louis C. Hill, supervising engineer.

THE KNIGHT OF THE SILVER STAR

A Romance
Of Drusenland

"After a time I began to feel drowsy. Suddenly a slight sound startled me. I was on the alert in a moment, but I could not locate it nor tell what manner of sound it was. I was facing down the corridor towards the entrance. It was pitch dark, and I came to the conclusion that I could hear voices and yet instinctively knew that the darkness hid something—something which threatened me. It seemed to palpitate in front of me suddenly, but none the less certainly. I put out my hand, passed it in front of me and at my side. It rested against the wall of the corridor at the sharp corner, one side of which gave entrance to the princess' apartments. I swept my sword round me at the full extent of my arm, but it touched nothing. Yet something was there, and I knew it.

Suddenly something touched me so gently that it might have been the brush of a bat's wing. It touched my arm extended to the wall. The next moment a swift blow fell upon my shoulder, and I started back, having run through me, for sharp steel had penetrated the joint of my armor. A second blow fell so quickly after the first that for a moment I thought I had struck another man. The blow failed in its purpose, glancing from my armor, and then I was grasping with a desperate man. He was not clad in steel, as I was—I could feel that—but he had the advantage of me, for he closed with me and could use his dagger, while for a time my sword was useless. He was conscious of his advantage and struck at my shoulder and again in quick succession, striking where he knew my armor would receive no blow yet, fortunately for me, striking beside the mark.

I gathered all my strength together and striking out with my left arm, wrenched myself from his grasp. Copyright, 1907, by R. F. Fenno & Co.

"A DEAD MAN, I SAY!" I ANSWERED With a low growl like an animal at bay, he sprang at me, but at last my sword arm was free. A mass of dark steel seemed to detach itself from the surrounding blackness, and then my weapon pierced it swiftly and clean. My wrist hardly felt the resistance. There was a low cry, a half smothered sob, and then a dull thud at my feet.

"You guard!" I cried, not too loudly, for fear of disturbing the princess. Yet no voice echoed in the silence.

The echo was the only answer. I waited for a few moments; then I called again and louder.

"Guard, ho, guard!"

Again an echo, but this time other sounds. Hurrying feet ascended the stairs; there was a glare of torchlight at the end of the corridor, and two soldiers came toward me. They were not the men I had seen on guard. There was another sound behind me. A bolt was shot back, a door opened, and there stood silhouetted in light, and behind him the princess.

"That is it!" said Jasor.

"A dead man, I fear," I answered. The torches flared in the white face of my enemy. It roused him.

"A hothe death than that other," he groaned.

Jasor fell on his knees beside him and raised him a little. The princess stood at my side.

"What other death?" said Jasor.

"I asked if I should be free if I killed him."

"Who said it? Speak, man!"

"It." And then came a sob.

The prostrate man shivered a little, his limbs twitched for a moment and then with one sudden thrusting out of his legs he slipped from Jasor's arms and lay still.

I turned to look at the princess.

"You are hurt, who said?" I asked.

"A scratch, nothing," I answered, yet I felt a weariness creeping over me.

"Do you know him?" she asked sharply, pointing to the dead man.

"No."

"Look."

I turned almost mechanically, for my legs seemed suddenly to have grown two feeble to support me.

"Do you know him?"

"No; yet—By heavens, yes. It is one of them."

The dead man was one of the prisoners of war.

the lady an awkward nurse. No, I cannot tell you what the circumstances were."

"Why am I a prisoner hero? Has Jasor headed a revolution and been successful?"

"Had he done so you would have been no longer even a prisoner. But come; I will tell you the circumstances and tell you what I can. You perhaps remember what the man who attacked you said when he was dying?"

"That he should be free if he killed me."

"I judged that was what he meant," said Jasor. "I tried to get him to tell more, but he died too quickly. He must have been deceived, for freedom had already been granted to all the prisoners without conditions. Therefore Sir Verrall, an enemy has endeavored to take your life by the hand of that prisoner."

"And the enemy?" I asked.

"The man died before he could speak," Jasor answered.

"How did he pass the guards at the head of the staircase?"

"As soon as your safety had been looked after and you had been brought here her highness sent for the men. Her highness sent for the men. The truth will perhaps never be known."

"There was treachery in our midst," Jasor continued. "The whole palace was awake at once, and over in the town there was little sleep that night. Search was made for the murderer in vain. At the council next day the highness did her utmost to prevent the matter to the root. She let it be understood that she believed it treacherous against herself; that the assassin's danger was indeed real, for her, and a shout of loyalty was the answer. It rang in the rafters of the council hall and found an echo in every street in the city. Then Sir Verrall—and mark you this well—her highness said that it was you who had saved the life of the sovereign, coming next to your own death in the act. There was no shout of praise, Sir Verrall. Almost a dead silence followed."

"Her highness tried to throw her protection over me and failed," I said quietly.

"She would not let me talk much about what had happened in the city."

"We are in perilous times," she said. "But you must be my prisoner still. You are not yet able to brave dangers. Here you are safe. Get strong again quickly, Sir Verrall, for I have need of you."

"And so we dismissed me."

"When Jasor had a garden, this simple entrance to it was from her suite of apartments. High walls surrounded it, and there was no fear of prying eyes. Hera I was privileged to walk or lie at full length in the shade of some tree, filling my lungs with new health at every breath. Here Jasor and I talked, and the princess joined us, staying on a small white sofa, but afterward, however, she took a place for the future. My friends were so anxious that it was impossible for me to stand unless someone could be devised against my enemies. Truth to tell, my friends and enemies troubled me little just then. I was too happy to fear the future, for the princess became each day less a princess and more a woman. I lived in the present, told them something of my country, of London, of railroads, of telegraphs and of many things which I had heard of."

"Will they dispatch me then and wait for another knight?" I asked.

"There are many ways. You might go to the mountains unexpectedly, and from the mountains you come unexpectedly. But there is a quicker way, and you have heard the laws of Drusenland. You have angered the God of war, and you therefore have failed."

"Did they say that they had been mistaken in proclaiming me the expected knight?"

"The priests are wiser than that, Sir Verrall," he answered. "They studied again. You were the knight, and you had troubled the laws of Drusenland. You have angered the God of war, and you therefore have failed."

"Will they dispatch me then and wait for another knight?" I asked.

"There are many ways. You might go to the mountains unexpectedly, and from the mountains you come unexpectedly. But there is a quicker way, and you have heard the laws of Drusenland. You have angered the God of war, and you therefore have failed."
